Back From
the Future

Many investors hurt their long-term results with emotionally-charged decisions when crises or hot investment trends occur. They think changing their portfolio will help them avoid losing money or make a quick gain.

Learn the tips that Annie Duke, a decision strategist and former poker pro, shared with us for staying rational and not allowing emotions to dictate decisions that can threaten long-term investment goals.

Join us to learn:

- Why many investors second-guess their investment strategy
- How mental time traveling can help improve decision making
- How precommitment contracts can help you avoid rash decisions
